ALLEGION WINS ARCHITIZER'S A+ AWARD FOR NDE SERIES WIRELESS ELECTRONIC LOCKS

Innovative Platform Earns Popular Vote in Building Product Hardware Category

CARMEL, IND. (April 15, 2015) – Allegion, a leading global provider of security products and solutions, won an Architizer A+ Award for its Schlage® NDE Series wireless electronic locks with ENGAGE™ technology.

Allegion won the popular vote in the building products hardware category, which targets the award program's community of more than 1 million users and fans.

The Architizer A+ Awards are a global architectural award program with 90-plus categories and a global jury with more than 300 architects, thought leaders and developers from innovative companies such as Google, Kickstarter and Pinterest. Over the past two years, the Architizer A+ Awards have grown to become the largest award program for architecture in the world.

“Allegion is devoted to expanding its innovative footprint as a leading provider of security products and solutions, and winning an award of this magnitude further validates this,” said Karen Keating, portfolio marketing manager at Allegion.

NDE Series wireless electronic locks is the first locking platform to use ENGAGE™ technology, which is designed to be easy to install, connect, manage and use. The NDE Series wireless electronic locks feature a smaller, more aesthetic wireless design – ideal for interior offices and sensitive storage areas, and fit a typical ND/cylindrical prep – making it great for renovations.

This innovative product opens the door to a new level of intelligence with optimal visibility and control at each opening. Users now have the ability to control exactly who has access where and when – right at their fingertips – and the new option helps users migrate from mechanical hardware to a credential-based electronic solution with ease.

“We developed the NDE Series wireless electronic locks platform to address a gap in the marketplace,” Keating said. “We are confident this unmet need has now been addressed because of the advanced thinking and dedication of our team here at Allegion.”
