

Many areas in healthcare facilities require a higher level of security.

Storage areas for linens, maintenance supplies, medical waste, deliveries and general materials are good examples of openings that benefit from the security, efficiency and convenience of electronic access control, but don't require the complexity of a fully networked system.

Operational requirements:

- Higher level of security than mechanical locks
- Management and tracking of individuals who have credentials and access to an area
- Standardization of electronic locks to more efficiently manage access rights
- Doors close completely so unauthorized persons are not able to enter

Innovative solutions for security sensitive areas—offline

Schlage® CO Series electronic locks

- Offers added security and convenience of electronic access control without cost or complexity of a fully-networked system
- Provides audit trail of who accessed what opening at what time
- Available options for a variety of credentials, including keypad only, proximity, magnetic stripe and dual credential plus PIN

Schlage® AD Series electronic locks

- Innovative modular design that allows you to upgrade to different readers or networking options without taking the lock off the door
- Available with office function that allows the door to unlock with a valid credential and relock automatically—ideal for applications where staff need free access, but sensitive or valuable materials need securing when the staff member leaves the room

LCN® door closers

- Proven strength and reliability that doors will close and latch properly
- Variety of options for concealed door closers that are ADA-compliant, UL- and/or cUL-listed and ANSI-certified
- Available in numerous finishes and arm or track functions to meet virtually all architectural requirements
